School Districts

Zak Tomlinson is a construction and procurement lawyer who represents a wide variety of public and private owners, including cities, port districts, school districts, utility districts and a number of special purpose districts.

Zak counsels clients at the initial phase of the procurement and construction process, including development and review of procurement policies and procedures, preparation of RFQ/RFP documents (including both traditional design/bid/build projects and alternative GC/CM, Design-Build and progressive Design-Build procurement), and drafting and negotiation of design and construction contracts. He also represents clients at all stages of the dispute resolution process, including bid protests, project claims and change order evaluation, and the mediation, arbitration and litigation of substantive claims (including construction defects, delay and impacts, and insurance coverage).

Zak is also deeply involved in the representation of various public and private owners in addressing and resolving construction and procurement issues related to the COVID-19 pandemic.
