Zach represents public, private, and nonprofit advocacy clients on a broad range of issues, focusing on constitutional law, political law, labor and employment law, and appellate advocacy. A former U.S. Department of Justice trial attorney and Washington State Assistant Attorney General, Zach brings strategic insight and a broad range of experience to help his clients navigate all stages of civil litigation—from discovery to motions practice through trial and appeal. During the COVID-19 pandemic, Zach has become one of Washington’s leaders in defending state and local governments against legal challenges to emergency public health measures. In over 40 such cases, no challenger won any form of relief against Zach’s clients.

After clerking for Judge David F. Hamilton of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, Zach joined an international law firm based in Seattle. With a diverse client base ranging from Fortune 100 companies to small nonprofits, Zach became an adaptive, civil generalist and courtroom advocate, litigating across a wide range of subject matter and taking six cases to trial. In DOJ’s Civil Rights Division, Zach litigated voting rights cases on behalf of the U.S. government, successfully suing to invalidate Texas’s strict voter ID law under the Voting Rights Act. In the Washington State Attorney General’s Office, Zach represented the State in various cases against the previous federal administration, including challenges to its deregulation of 3D-printed firearms and to the “public charge” immigration rule. Zach also led the litigation team defending the State’s emergency response to COVID-19, going undefeated in 28 lawsuits.

Before going to law school, Zach taught global history at a Brooklyn high school through Teach For America. Born and raised in Seattle, Zach is a proud graduate of Garfield High School, where he played baseball and in the jazz band. He continues to play sax and piano in his free time, and also enjoys cycling, yoga, and live music.

Zach serves on the boards of Northwest Justice Project and the Washington Bus, and as Vice Chair of the Seattle Ethics and Elections Commission.
