Pronouns:
she, her, hers

Alanna Peterson focuses her practice on helping public, private, and nonprofit clients navigate complex statutory, regulatory, and constitutional issues. She provides strategic and values-aligned legal advice and represents clients in litigation involving a broad range of issues impacting our communities, including nonprofit governance and formation, municipal law, environmental and land use law, public policy and planning, and the political process. She also works with clients to draft, defend, and implement state and local initiatives, legislation, and public programs. Alanna serves as outside general counsel to several state and national nonprofit organizations working to ensure abortion access.

Alanna is committed to public service. She regularly provides pro bono counsel to various state and national nonprofit organizations advocating for issues related to reproductive, environmental, immigrant, and economic justice, including by filing amici curiae briefs in state and federal appellate courts and providing direct representation to people facing systemic barriers to justice. Alanna is also actively involved in land conservation and outdoor recreation efforts in this region, with a focus on promoting equitable, inclusive, and meaningful access to parks and open space. Alanna is a member of the Seattle Planning Commission and co-chair of its Land Use and Transportation committee.
